WHAT TRAVELERS ASK ABOUT TOURIST HOMES

When a car full of tourists pulls up at the door of a "tourist home", what sort of questions are they likely to ask before deciding to take lodging for the night? In a new bulletin issued by the Maine Extension Service, a number of the questions frequently asked by tourists are assembled for tourist home owners who may wish to prepare for answering them. The following questions are included:

What are your rates? How much do you charge for children?

Is there plenty of hot water? Are the beds comfortable? What kind of mattresses do you have on the beds?

Do you provide soap? Are there plenty of towels?

Can we eat a meal in our rooms? Do you serve meals? How much do you charge?

Are the windows screened?

Are the cabins heated? Do they have running water? Are there porches on the cabins? Are they screened?

Is the milk pasteurized? Do you serve fresh vegetables?

May we park our car? What is there of interest to see around here? Where shall we go to get good meals?

Is there a place to swim nearby? Are there tennis courts, golfing? Can we go fishing, boating? Is the shore sandy or rocky?
